

"With great skill and meticulous research, Dianne Payne throws light on village life in Hertfordshire over the last 150 years by focusing on the residents of a tiny street hamlet outside Wheathampstead.

A remarkable achievement indeed. Drawing us into the lives and loves of characters at The Folly – their occupations, life-styles and social interactions, their trials and tribulations – gives us a real feeling for the times of succeeding generations. We come away with plenty to learn in our own age about the importance of neighbourliness and community."

Hugh L'Estrange, Editor, The Vine, Wheathampstead Churches Together

"A splendid and important contribution to the history of our village. The depth and breadth of research is impressive and the style successfully combines the research with a human portrayal of the lives of the people of The Folly."

Patrick McNeill, Local Historian

"A pleasure to read, this book is a delightful and engaging account of the spirit of Folly people past and present. Speaking in their own words, many tell their own story, impressing us with their resourcefulness and resilience as they coped with times of trouble and poverty."

Ruth Jeavons, Secretary, Wheathampstead History Society
